ANNA BURLES

The curator of glamorous, quirky spaces for the creative classes

Who are you?

I am an interior designer and founder of Run for the Hills with my husband, the artist Christopher Trotman.

What do you love about interiors?

We get to let our imaginations and creativity run riot, fashioning spaces to make people happier.

Who are your clients?

Creative-industry folk across London and further afield, including the singer Ellie Goulding. We also design restaurants and bars, including the Tivoli cinema, in Bath, and Cricket in the new Television Centre, west London.

Describe your style

Eclectic, artistic and creative.

Your muses and mentors?

Muses: my husband, London, New York, Buenos Aires, the Brazilian architect Oscar Niemeyer. Mentors: my beloved departed father, Dennis, and Jenny Gibbs and Julia Begbie from KLC, who trained me.

Your top tip or trick?

Use mirrors to reflect the most gorgeous detail, piece of art or furniture. It doubles the exposure and impact.

Autumn trends our readers will love?

The 1970s glamour trend will morph into glamorous earthy warm tones in golds, mustards, olives, rusts and earthy browns.

What is your best budget buy?

French Connection for great chairs, Pooky for cost-effective lighting and H&M Home for cheap and cheerful accessories.

What is always worth splurging on?

A good sofa. Maker & Son do the most comfortable ones in the world.

What's it all about this autumn?

Sexy sustainability.
